The Angolan pavilion cost some ten million dollars US, but served its purpose to present the life and times of Angola to potential tourists and business contacts alike. The Pavilion served traditional meals at its restaurant, and sold locally produced craft items from the various tribal areas. An important element of the presentation involved performances from indigenous artists and a display of Angolan art.

The various forms of art presented at the exhibition rooted in Angolan culture and heritage, predominantly inspired by ideograms of the Lunda Tchokwe culture, the philosophy of African proverbs, the physical and mental connection between beings, common social problems, the beauty and adornment of African women, the tradition of African courts and its Afro-futurist interpretation. All up, the pavilion was a hit with visitors. Wiki etc.
